

The new edition of FIFA is the first to harness the power of motion capture to deliver a re-designed game where every player moves and behaves in a more natural way. This includes the option to change the new ball physics, allowing players to increase movement speed, control and ball contact for greater natural ball movement, and manipulate the movement of the ball as they run. The ball can be struck higher and lower on the ground, and moves quicker in each direction, offering more control over the ball's trajectory. Controlling the ball is much closer to real-life ball control – allowing easier, smoother ball control with greater accuracy and control. Adjustable movement speed allows players to choose how fast they move around the pitch. Players can adjust their speed depending on whether they need to cover a lot of ground quickly to chase down a ball or if they want to start a run and be more settled. The speed of a player can also be increased by pressing the sprint key while in free-run mode. The speed of the player can be adjusted in the player menu when the player is in a free-run or sprinting. The new dribbling system provides greater ball control, with players able to accelerate the ball by pushing the ball with the outside of their foot or dribble the ball by pressing and holding the passing button. Players can switch between actions with the press of a button. The new dribbling system not only allows greater ball control, but also allows players to change the direction of a run by changing the direction they pass the ball. The new dribbling system can be used with all types of players, allowing players to continue their run in the correct direction by pressing the sprint button after a pass. On-ball actions are now easier to perform, due to improved timing and player movement, allowing players to choose a move with greater ease and control on-the-move. Players will benefit from improved off-the-ball movement. All player types can now effectively drift towards the ball without being restricted to a single direction. Players can perform 360-degree natural movements, allowing players to move across the pitch with more fluidity, giving players greater choice in ball play and build up play. Also, players now have more flexibility to turn or side-step when being challenged for the ball, giving them an advantage in battle for the ball. A new dribbling system uses dribbling and passing actions to control the ball. Players can choose to perform a

Features Key:

- World-class gameplay innovations and controls: Developed with Jordan Valentin, Senior Game Producer EA SPORTS – the creator of FIFA series, FIFA 22 is built to take advantage of new advances in lighting, player animations and ball physics across key gameplay areas, including Player AI, tackling, ball control, goalkeepers and goal scoring.
